

Tamar Ulysses Slay (born April 2, 1980) is an American former professional basketball player. A 6 ft 8 in (2.03 m) guard-forward, he was formerly with the NBA's New Jersey Nets and Charlotte Bobcats.

Slay was the 54th overall pick in the 2002 NBA draft, selected by the Nets.[1] He attended Marshall University \(Huntington, West Virginia\), where he was one of the team's most prominent players, averaging 15.7 points per game over his four-year college career. He graduated from Woodrow Wilson High School in Beckley, where he contributed to state AAA basketball championships in 1997 and 1998, two of the five basketball state championships won by Woodrow Wilson High School in the 1990s.

After a successful 12-year professional basketball player, Tamar Slay has turned his experience into a platform dedicated to taking your game to the next level.

Tamar Slay Basketball (TSB) believes in a “no shortcuts” philosophy. Our mission is to immerse you in the sport of basketball, with game-like situations, so you can perform at a high level when the game is on the line. The way you practice is the way you will play – so we don’t waste your time with drills that aren’t useful because we strive for greatness in the gym and in the game!

Our mission is to teach young players the right way by starting from basic fundamentals and working up to more advanced training.